BFI and ERIC screen careers research

Following research that 13 to 16 year olds are not receiving adequate careers advice about the screen industries, the BFI and ERIC produced a report outlining recommendations to address the knowledge gap. The report also looks at careers advice in schools and in relation to screen industries.

Some findings include:

- There is a shortage of skilled crew in film, TV, VFX, animation and games
- 82% of employers rated recruitment difficulties as moderate to very serious
- Young people and careers teams want to know more about careers in the screen industries and they need to be better supported by the industry
- More young people are looking for careers information through social media platforms such as TikTok and YouTube. This poses a great opportunity for the industry to provide short-form careers guidance on these platforms.

Some facts and figures from the BFI research:
